Red Mountain Golf club, located in the heart of mining culture at the old Tin Mine, Phuket, was the social and natural resources hub of southern Thailand. The canyon topography creates the unique local architectural identity and its surrounding area. The mining architectural elements are translated to the clubhouse architecture. The clubhouse welcomes all visitors to absorb environment where the tradition meets contemporary.

The long curved building with lifted ground floor and the structure of the roof are the most significant elements of architectural showcase of the building. This clubhouse illustrates the contemporary Thai vernacular where the land, environment, history, and architecture are together playing a key role of learning the past of the mining culture and architecture.
